

The Eagle's Nest Stands Silent

By Jim Weller (June 17, 2013)

The eagle's nest stands silent
Her annual labor done
She's proven herself trustworthy
Each battle fought, she's won.

As wandering eagles see her
Without a word she'll say,
"This territory's taken!
You'd best be on your way!"

Through the blistering heat of summer
While standing high and proud
She'll chant of former glories,
But not a word aloud.

Crowning autumn's canopy
She will breathe a quiet sigh
As her master and her mistress
Dance across the sky.

Speechless through the snowfall
Atop that barren tree
She'll patiently anticipate
The things that are to be.

Then just before the springtime
She will end her time of rest
And sing anew a song of joy
With new life in her breast!

The eagle's nest stands silent
Yet has so much to say
If we just pause to listen
As we hasten by today. 🌀
